HUNTING THE GIRAFFE. TO BAST MATTER TO BAG ONE OF

There were plenty of giraffes to be met with on the borders of the Kalahari Desert a dozen pars ago, and maybe are now, though I doubt These beautiful animals have a wide georaphical range, but are very local and may plentiful in one district, while they are astically unknown in the adjoining one. I'erseally I always had great compunction in centroying them, and only did so when meat as a sine nua nos, for the killing of so large a resture was an act of mercy toward some salf-started natives. He must, indeed, be sight pang from the expression of a dring deer or antelope, and the effect produced on me by the ere of an expiring giraffe is more I care to express. No other animal has an eye, not even the gazolle. But a hunt-ist not be tender-hearted, or he had better

As far as I was concerned, he was quite safe; I must indeed be hungry to tackle arrof his meat. Of all the insufferable rankers, the flesh of an old bull giraffe is about he worst; something between a buck silled during the rut and an old wild boar. As a rule hunters are not particularly fastidious in the way of viands; and appetite engendered by hard open air exercise is a pretty good sauce and almost anything is palstable.

It was now necessary that I should make for alimp of Mopani trees, which I calculated would bring me to within a couple of hundred ards of the giraffes, but to which the interseting velid was open and required much warming to negotiste. I managed to reach it girafit and without rausing any change in the demeanor of the animals. As I have said he distance was now a couple of hundred pards.

and I thought I might possibly drive him nearer, as I had driven cland before.

Here my horse put his foot in a meercat's hole and went down, throwing me rather heavily, but fortunately not injuring himself at all. The commotion seemed to infuse new vigor into the wounded giraffe, and away he went on his former line, and by the time I had picked up my scattered self and helongings and good way shead and going like his confrores, it was quite a while before I could come up with him again, an twhen I did I gave him a shot in the side, feeling this must end it. I began to wish I had given chase when they were first sighted: I should probably have been just as well off and saved myself a lot of trouble. The shot did not seem to affect him more than to make him lurch a bit, for he went on just the same, indeed, if anything, faster, and I fell a little in the rear; neither could I get the breech of my carbine open. It had somehow got jammed in the tumble and I had to pull up once more and try what I could to with it. After considerable trouble, at no little expense to my hunting knife, I got it open and another cartridge in.

In the meantime the giraffic had made good use of his remaining powers and was fully a mile ahead. I felt certain, however, that he must come to a stand before long and, any way I would take back as much meat as I could load up on the horse and walk back myself. So once again I started in pursuit, and having at last come up with the now almost exhausted beast I rode right alongside, and holding un my carbine so as to aimost touch him fired and amashed his shoulder, rolling him over, and I then sheedily put him out of his misery.

I wes now some miles from the wagon, and that his should be left to be devoured by hyenas, which hack to our skerm, which was accordingly done. During the night the hyenss made a great fuse over the offal, which we had taken the precaution to drag some distance from camp, and kept us awake till carly morning. A lion also roared several times and necessitated a watch bei

Next day I shot this lioness, a very old one, with fangs all worn down, and just such a one as would be dangerous on account of her locapacity to hunt in the ordinary way.

Many months after I got another giraffe much further north. I had been after and had just killed an estrich and while tlucking out the feathers a small herd of giraffes came galloning along straight for me almost before I was aware of it, having evidently been alserned by something further on which had sent them in my direction. Again our commissariat needed replenishing, and as some young giraffe steak would be far preferable to some jaw-pulling tack off an old cock ostrich. I hastily packed together the feathers I had pulled and which would represent a neat little sum at Cape Town, and jumping into the saddle was ready to give chase, although my horse was jaded from his work after the feathered biped. They came, however, so well within range that I took careful sim at the likeliest looking beast and let fly. My hall caught her—a young female—right on the forearm, splintering the bone and bringing her down at once and in less than no time I had her laid out. This was one of the quickest birs of work I ever had a hand in, considering all the circumstances.

LIVING WITH A GHOST. The Experience of a Group of Young Bachelors in Washington,

The Experience of a Group of Young Backers would bring me to within a couple of hundred yards of the siraffes, but to which the intersecting yield was open and required much surming to negotive. At other times in walking across the room there would suddenly come a blinding sense of an intangible handkerchief tied about their eyes with such dexterity as to offectually impede further progress. Again, about the height of a foot from the floor, would rise sudden barriers that, upon investigation, would resolve themselves into nothingness. In going up or down the stairs it was of frequent occurrence to meet the ghostly visitant, who passed on its way with the swish and rustle as of either expressive. The mystery was never exrence to meet the gnostiv visitant, sho passed on its way with the swish and rustle as of sliken garments. There is a curious story of the Charlion apur, that from time of which the family has no record has been in their possession. The quaint old border custom of using this spur to replenish the larder of the house of Charlion is decidedly investing it with the properties of a massed. The retainers having been invited to dinner the spur was served up in a covered dish. When the lid was lifted the sight of the spur intimated to the retainers that that was about the most nourishing thing contained in the larder, and that it behooved them to properly supply the deficiency. This spur was exhibited recently before the Newcastic Society of Antiquaries. Sir George Travely an ha-in his possession a painting of the late W, hell Scott, in which the incident of the Charlion spur here referred to is portrayed.

TUESDAY, Feb. 13. As foreshadowed in this column several recks ago, the Senate Finance Committee acting evidently under pressure from its col leagues, is dealing with the tariff on sugar from an entirely different point of view from that which was taken by the House when it passed the Wilson bill. A growing belief that the Senate will favor not only a duty upon raw sugar, but a slightly higher rate upon refined, resulted to-day in a net advance of 2% & cent. in the price of American Sugar Refining stock. The transactions in that stock were unusually large, footing up more than one-third of the total sales. The pre-

A Washington despatch says: "The regular Treasury statement issued to-day shows that the receipts from customs dues at New York for the first ten days of this month aggregated $2.051,373, as against $4.525,384 in last February and $4.321,475 in February, 1852. Of this, 16.1 ? cent. was paid in gold and 60.3 in silver certificates, the balance being divided up among other classes of money. With the sale of bonds the Treasury is not only gaining gold but also gold certificates, having now on hand of the inter -467,880. There is no likelihood, however, of the Treasury resuming the issue of gold certificates, as there is no good reason to believe that the gold in the Treasury will long remain above the $100,000,000 mark. It is only $4,000,000 above the reserve now and with but $4,000,000 of gold to be received from the new bond purchase. If it is the intention to keep the gold reserve intact, it is the general belief among Treasury officials that a new issue of $30,000,000 in honds will have to be resorted to within the rescue, as the expenditures continue to run aband of received at the rate of $50,000,000 a pieces and sold to small or large investors. The person with $500 or $1,000 to invest can now get as good mortgage security as the person or corporation with $100,000, ILLUSTRATION.

The Title Guarantee and Trust Company takes a first mortgage on a piece of improved New York City real estate. The mortgage in every case is such as the Savings Banks, Trust Companies or trustees of estates would take, and is guaranteed besides by the Bond and Mortgage Guarantee Company.

4% Mortgage Participation Certificates in denominations of $500 and $1,000 are then ssued and sold to the amount of the mortgage. They are in effect assignments of parts of the guaranteed mortgage. The purchaser of one of them secures not an interest in the assets of the company, but a definite part of a definite mortgage on a piece of wellknown property, which can be readily inspected before purchase. These certificates are in form like, and have all the availability of, a municipal or railway bond. They have all the stability and certainty of a bond and mortgage. They are the safest and most convenient se-rurity to be had to-day. Apply at any of the offices of the two companies,
